

WHO: 10% of Medicine in Developing Countries Fake or Substandard

I.

killing hundreds of thousands of [REDACTED] and wasting billions antibiotics, cancer treatments and diabetes medication cannot treat or prevent disease, WHO said. split.

treatment failures, also resistance fixing the problem will take [REDACTED] resources affect the most vulnerable [REDACTED]

Countries have agreed time to translate them into products

II.

funny how death isn't much on the mind isn't much a real thing isn't much a concern until your body is a galactic crucible is a pillar of creation for the death-makers how with one mistaken action you could be a supernova an epicenter of disease each heavy particle of you chain reacting into another person and all you can do is take one little pill one little pill that supposedly will stop your own death and stop you from killing others others that trust you to take that pill and then you read an article that tells you ten percent but probably more of all drugs are fake are fake and could kill or help kill or turn away from the killing and it makes you want to eat the whole bottle like some gravitational force sucking in the dusty remnants of the exploded universe just suck down the whole bottle and refill the bottle and eat those pills too and refill the bottle and eat those and refill the bottle if only to stop this explosion to stop anything within your nonexistent power

III.

WHO urges governments to take action disease or death.

Imagine a ██████ who gives up
This is █████ acceptable Countries have agreed

a threat to losing power

estimate the threat by modelling ██████ dying
A second model of failure quality constrained more research needed to determine impact of sales

Countries need to prevent response
